1.2 Other News and Developments

1.2.1 EPA Proposes Stronger Air Quality Standards for Nitrogen Dioxide

EPA is proposing to strengthen the nation's NO₂ air quality standard, according to EPA's online announcement. According to the pre-publication draft posted online, the proposed changes apply to the primary NO₂ standard and would do the following:

- Establish, for the first time, a 1-hour NO₂ standard at a level between 80 and 100 ppb
- Retain the current annual average NO₂ standard of 53 ppb
- Add NO₂ monitoring within 50 meters of major roads in cities with at least 350,000 residents
- Continue monitoring "area-wide" NO₂ concentrations in cities with at least 1 million residents

These proposed standards and additional monitoring requirements are intended to reduce people's exposure to high, short-term concentrations of NO₂, which generally occur near roadways. The proposal also is meant to ensure that area-wide NO₂ concentrations remain below levels that can cause public health problems.

The public comment period will be open for 60 days after the proposal is published in the Federal Register. EPA will hold two public hearings in August 2009—one in Los Angeles and one in the Washington, D.C., area. Details regarding the public hearings will be published in a separate notice later this summer. EPA must promulgate a final rule on the NO₂ standard by 22 January 2010. Further information about the proposal is posted on EPA's website.

1.2.2 House Passes Bill to Cap Emissions

The U.S. House of Representatives approved the American Clean Energy and Security Act (H.R. 2454) on 26 June 2009. The Act would place mandatory caps on U.S. GHG emissions, change the way HFCs are regulated, and institute other climate change-related requirements.

The bill would cut U.S. GHG emissions (other than HFCs) 17 percent by 2020 and 83 percent by 2050, using the 2005 levels as a baseline, by establishing a cap-and-trade system. The bill would impose renewable electricity standards on states and federal agencies.

Further information regarding H.R. 2454, which will soon be the subject of Senate debate, is available at the Library of Congress site. The text of the bill as passed by the House also is available.

2.2.1 Climate Action Reserve Verification Program Manual Released

The Climate Action Reserve has released the final version of the Verification Program Manual. This document provides verification bodies with a standardized approach for the independent and rigorous verification of GHG emissions reductions and removals. The Verification Program Manual gives insight into the verification process, the requirements for conducting verification (such as accreditation and training), conflict of interest and confidentiality provisions, and the core verification activities expected. The Verification Program Manual was created as a supplemental document to the Program Manual, which summarizes the overarching rules, policies, and procedures for registering projects and creating offset credits with the Reserve according to its protocols.

The Verification Program Manual is effective now. However, the Reserve recognizes that some of these new policies, particularly in relation to liability insurance, require additional time for implementation. Therefore, verification bodies have until 31 December 2009 to comply with these new requirements.
